BLOOD & BETRAYALS

Summer Tuatha De Daanan has no interest in learning more about her past or why someone applied to Avalon on her behalf. Her emotional walls keep everyone at bay, and her sharp tongue makes people give her a wide berth. Yet, despite her best attempts, her emotional armor begins to melt from her feral vampire roommate to the angelic senior who is never dissuaded by her feigning disinterest. Maybe this could be good for her. Dark secrets lurk in the halls of Avalon, and soon those same halls are drenched in blood. Summer finds herself as the obsession of the sadistic stalker with the warning: Seven lessons to learn. With the help of her new friends, she races against the clock to solve the mystery.

YOU COULD BE HAPPY HERE

Shortly after the untimely death of her mother, Lucy makes a series of discoveries that shatter her idea of who she is and where she belongs. First, Lucy finds letters to her—letters her mother hid—from a Costa Rican named Gabriel, claiming he is her father and that he has land for her in Palmita, the coastal village where they used to spend summers. Lucy then learns that her sister, who always stayed closer to home, will inherit their mother's Northern California house, an inheritance Lucy had counted on sharing. Rudderless, disinherited, and recently demoted at work, Lucy resolves to use her upcoming spring break to revisit Palmita and track down her potential father.

WHEN I'M 64

64-year-old Eisel Jane McCord's world is just fine until her husband of 43 years announces that he's joining an archaeological dig in Peru—solo. She decides that if he can live so easily without her, she can do the same! She dusts off her teenage bucket list and realizes that she still hadn't checked off "Buying a house" and "Experiencing a great romance," since she'd done the one in tandem and, well, marriage hadn't produced the other. Enter an adorable country cottage, and two desirable bachelors, Cal and Dan, both who sweep Eisel off her feet—creating a sticky love quadrangulation that gets more complicated with every flirty comment these two men make. And of course, there's still Jimmy.

GAJARAH

Emahn is big haired, mischievous, and larger than life. Born in the Arabian Gulf, she spends extended summers with her grandparents, aunties, and cousins on the rooftops of Lahore. But tucked away beneath her spirited exterior, Emahn carries the weight of childhood trauma. When she marries and moves to Canada, she quickly learns the art of navigating multiple realities and compartmentalizing memories of the world she left behind, even as she clings to the stories of her home. She is resilient; she is driven; she is unbreakable. Almost. When tragedy strikes, Emahn must draw upon the deepest wells of her ancestral strength to survive, even if it means revisiting her gutting past.

THE HEAD'S TALE

Miranda Crandell, the Head of Strutthorn Academy, has a brilliant idea to one-up the other elite New England prep schools with their piddling plots of organic veggies for experiential learning: She'll buy a swamp. Yes, a bog, a quagmire, where she intends to build a special science center. What she doesn't account for is Paul Dickersen—her newly hired freshwater biologist, who is strikingly handsome (even in cargo pants) and turns out to be an irresistible lover. Miranda soon she becomes her own problem. The Head of School is supposed to be a steadfast and principled role model for impetuous teenage students. Instead, Miranda becomes crazed with lust, spiraling into a wild and messy journey of self-discovery.

THE ASHTRAYS ARE FULL AND THE GLASSES ARE EMPTY

Heiress Sara Wiborg dreams of a more creative life than the rigid future prescribed for her. It's only when she meets Gerald Murphy that she finds a man who shares her creative, aesthetic ideal and, after a friendship of eleven years, they marry despite the strong disapproval of her family. Against the sizzling Jazz Age backdrop of 1920s Paris and Antibes, Sara's innate style and gift for friendship attract the bohemian elite of the new century—including Hemingway, Fitzgerald, Picasso, and Dorothy Parker. But by the 1930s, her fortune is lost and tragedy strikes— twice. Sara's strength and resilience allow her to find a new equilibrium over time, long after the parties have ended.

BUTTERFLY GAMES

Neglected by her parents and ostracized by the people around her, young countess Jacquette Gyldenstolpe falls in love with Prince Oscar, heir to the Swedish throne—but their passionate affair has far-reaching consequences for the new Bernadotte dynasty. By the time Jacquette learns that the Butterfly Game is not for the faint-hearted, it is too late. For she has a secret, and she will stop at nothing to protect it. Based on a true story and set in stormy early-1800s Europe, Butterfly Games is a sweeping historical tale of forbidden love, fierce duty, and the cost of ambition. Jacquette's story will transport readers to a world where every whisper could lead to triumph or ruin.

"An excellent work of historical fiction that delivers an engaging romance and memorable characters." —Kirkus Reviews

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Kelly Scarborough

After more than two decades as an attorney, I wrote Butterfly Games, my debut novel, a tragic love story about two star-crossed lovers, a countess and a prince. It's based on real-life characters who lived in Sweden, and is perfect for fans of Philippa Gregory, Outlander, and Bridgerton. I live on the Connecticut Shoreline and in South Carolina's Lowcountry, where I bang away on my MacBook Pro whenever my Shih Tzu cooperates.
